Dear sir ██████████

Thank you for your email. A study by the Netherlands Gaming Authority has revealed that four of the ten loot boxes that were studied contravene the Betting and Gaming Act (Wet op de kansspelen, Wok). The reason is that the content of these loot boxes is determined by chance and that the prizes to be won can be traded outside of the game: the prizes have a market value. Offering this type of game of chance to Dutch players without a license is prohibited. The gaming Authority does not make any statements about which loot boxes are in violation of the law.

Kind regards,

Hi,

I'm a reporter with the Mail on Sunday in London and I came across your loot boxes study. Gambling, especially when children are at risk, is something we are often interested in. I was wondering if it would be possible to have a chat about your findings, particularly which games had 'illegal' boxes due to their transferability and what levels of transferability flagged things up (i.e sanctioned trades or mechanisms that allow black-market trades).

Thanks in advance
